

The issue is not cancer but mortality per se. Philosophy answers dispassionately to incontestability.

Simply and fully the concept of God expresses perfect rigor. Free will and determination, mortality and eternity, presume impossibility in every possible world.

We lose our way as we stray from paths of perfect rigor.